COORDINATOR'S MESSAGE

Hi Everyone!

Convention Plans
 I hope that many of you will be able to attend this year's CPA convention in Hamilton June 12-14, because SWAP has an exciting program in the convention. As well as two SWAP sponsored speakers, Celia Kitzinger from York University in England and Regina Schuller from York University in Toronto, there are three SWAP sponsored symposia, a theory review session, and a number of poster presentations. See below for the schedule. I have not received the final schedule from CPA but this outline should be very close to the final version.

I also hope that we will see many of you at the Section Business meeting on Thursday, June 12, 2:30 - 3:55. In addition to our regular business, we will be giving the SWAP awards for students and the Distinguished Member. We will also be presenting the Feminist Mentoring Award for the first time. This award was initiated by Karen Kranz, SWAP's Graduate Student Representative. Its purpose is to recognize and honour feminist supervisors who have promoted the advancement of their students.

By-Law Amendment

In the February newsletter, an amendment to the SWAP by-laws was proposed which would lengthen the terms of Coordinator, Past Coordinator and Coordinator Elect to two years each (from the current one year). There was a lively debate about this amendment on email. A "friendly" amendment was proposed where the Coordinator position would be a two-year term but Past Coordinator and Coordinator Elect would just serve for one year each. The Past Coordinator would stay on for one year beyond her term as Coordinator and be responsible for finding the Coordinator Elect who would be in the role for one year before becoming Coordinator.

While the original amendment would have entailed a six-year commitment, this new plan would involve only a four-year commitment. From the responses I received via email, most members, including a number of former Coordinators, were in support of the amended amendment. In order to propose this amendment, CPA requires that we give members at least 30 days notice before the meeting. Since many of you will not receive the newsletter within this limit, we will leave this amendment until next year.

Review of CPA Guidelines

The two sub-committees of the Status of Women Committee are continuing their review of the guidelines for therapy and counselling with women and the guidelines for non-sexist research. Once the two groups have produced drafts of the new proposed guidelines, we will be circulating them to the SWAP membership for feedback.

I am delighted to announce that we have a new Newsletter Editor, Robin Cox. Robin is a doctoral student in the Counselling Psychology program at UBC and also has a background in journalism. She has lots of ideas for the newsletter and will be putting them forward in future newsletters. If you have any articles or notices for the newsletter, please forward them to her.

Many thanks once again to Renée Cormier for all her outstanding work as Newsletter Editor and Web-mistress. Renée is now at home enjoying life with her new daughter Danielle.

SWAP has had a busy and productive year. My job has been made immeasurably easier by the hard work and commitment of the other Executive members. Diane Priebe, Past Coordinator, has been a huge source of information and support for me as Coordinator, Connie Kristiansen, Coordinator Elect, stepped in and took over the Status of Women Committee and initiated the review of the CPA guidelines, and Noreen Stuckless, Secretary/Treasurer, has continued to keep our finances on an even keel. Maria Gurevich, Abstract Review Coordinator, and Charlene Senn, Student Awards Coordinator, have graciously and efficiently continued their work for the CPA convention, Sandra Pyke, SWAP-CPA Board Liaison and SWAP-SPW Liaison, has provided the our membership with valuable information about SPW, and Karen Kranz, Graduate Student Representative, has energetically initiated all kinds of activities. Many thanks to everyone.

There are always opportunities for SWAP members to become involved, and I hope you will consider volunteering this coming year. Please feel free to contact me, or any of the other members of the Executive.

Elizabeth

EDITOR'S MESSAGE

Hello, and thanks to everyone for their welcome-aboard messages. The transfer from Renée's organized and capable hands to my, hopefully as capable, hands has been a last minute affair, so I apologize if you are receiving this newsletter a little later than usual. I am excited at the opportunity for becoming more involved in SWAP and I look forward to meeting all of you in the coming years.

Renée has done an amazing job with the newsletter and I hope to live up to her standards. I also hope to build on the solid base established by Renée and her predecessors by encouraging some new material highlighting the rich and varied work being done by SWAP members.

I have only just returned to academia after a 6-year absence, and I am struck anew by the exciting diversity of feminist research within psychology. I am also reminded, however, of the challenges we face in staying abreast of what research is going on across regions and across areas of interest. In future issues I hope to begin to address that disconnection in a small way by including a featured column on members' new and ongoing research projects.

This is an idea that will evolve over time, so if you have any suggestions as to what you would like to see, or hear about, drop me an e-line. In the meantime, if you are involved in an interesting research project, why not let me know about it in a brief (one paragraph) abstract.

It looks as though CPA promises to be very exciting again this year, particularly the 3 SWAP-sponsored symposia. Because of previous commitments I will not be at the convention this year, but I look forward to meeting some of you next year in Newfoundland. Please be sure to drop by for the Annual Business Meeting on Thursday, June 12 to meet the members of the SWAP Executive Committee.

One final note concerns the issue of print versus electronic newsletter. I know that I have become so used to receiving most of my mail electronically that I was surprised that so few members wanted an electronic copy of the letter. I am all in favor of saving a few trees so I have asked Elizabeth to raise the issue of electronic versus print at this year's business meeting. If you are interested in receiving your newsletter electronically please let me know at: rspc@interchange.ubc.ca.

I hope you all have a great summer and a great conference!
Robin Cox,
Newsletter Editor

FEMINIST REVIEW

White, J., Tutt, S., Rude, D., Mutwiri, B., & Senevonghachack, O. (2002). Post Traumatic Stress Disorder: The Lived Experience of Immigrant, Refugee and Visible Minority Women. Winnipeg, MB: Prairie Women's Health Centre of Excellence. pp. 59.

Reviewed by Jennifer A. Boisvert, M.A.

This research report offers the reader a rich description of Canadian immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women's lived experiences of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). This report informs the reader of how PTSD symptoms are precipitated by exposure to disaster/ trauma within war-torn countries and how immigrating to Canada may perpetuate inadvertently PTSD symptoms among refugee/visible minority women. The potential benefits of conducting participatory action research, especially the promotion of a more contextual understanding of PTSD by participants and service providers, are underscored. Additional potential benefits are emphasized: empowering participants in their healing and recovery; improving community-based service delivery; and recommending changes to better reflect the mental health care needs of immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women within Canadian government policy. This document is comprised of eight different sections that parallel with the research process. These sections are described and their strengths and/or drawbacks are noted as follows.

In the introduction, the authors focus attention on the scope and severity of PTSD symptomatology amongst women coming to Canada from war-torn countries. This section clearly identifies a need for more research in this area given its relevance to improving provision of mental health services by local/provincial organizations in Saskatchewan. The reader is made aware of how it came to be that one woman's personal experience of PTSD was the seed idea for the research inquiry and how her experience guided the aims of this research study. The reader is informed of the research aims, goals, expected outcomes, and potential benefits. While the authors succeed in clearly articulating the importance of the research study on individual and local levels, they fail to argue convincingly of its necessity on provincial/national levels. Greater citation of current statistics concerning the incidence/ prevalence of PTSD among Canadian immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women would support this argument.

"Methods" outlines the phases of the research study and thus assists the reader in achieving a clear picture of the research timeline and process. The reader is oriented to the philosophy of the study as a synthesis of participant- and women-centered perspectives; a philosophy that is well articulated by the authors. They state: "...the women most intimately connected to the problem must control and direct the research. The direction was important to keep the research true to its vision. The control was important to ensure a process that was healing for those involved" (p. 2). Additionally, the reader is provided with descriptions concerning the collaboration of research team members as well as participant characteristics. Although the authors provide the reader with a detailed description of the project beginnings and proceedings, they neglect to provide details concerning data collection methods and data analysis procedures. Accordingly, the reader is left to speculate as to the precise data collection methods and data analysis procedures used in this study. On this basis, the reader is unable to evaluate the degree to which the research findings and conclusions accurately reflect participant descriptions.

"Limitations of the Study" adequately addresses inquiries the reader might have specific to research issues of privacy, confidentiality, and anonymity. This section offers the reader a sense of how research team members allayed participants fears of stigma given the small size of ethnic communities across Saskatchewan. In addition to identifying stigma as a barrier to participant involvement in the study, language and education (i.e., lack of awareness and knowledge about PTSD symptoms) were also identified as potential barriers. That service providers rarely worked with immigrant and refugee women was thought to impact the overall success of the project. That is, the limited involvement of service providers was suggested to result in the recruiting of a small sample as well as limiting the generalizability of the research findings and the proposing of recommendations for policy changes to improve mental health service delivery. Although a number of study limitations were identified, namely barriers to participant involvement, those relevant to rigour and trustworthiness of the research findings were not.

"Literature Review" offers the reader a historical account of theory and research on PTSD from psychological (e.g., psycho-dynamic, behavioural) and physiological (e.g., stress response, trauma principle) perspectives. The reader is provided with a definition of PTSD along with a conceptualization and information concerning typical symptom presentation. The reader learns that PTSD is commonly diagnosed by service providers and is contingent on several factors: recognition of symptoms as presented by clients; application of theoretical knowledge of PTSD; and utilization of criteria as outlined in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual for Mental Disorders (DSM) (DSM-IV-TR: APA, 2000). The reader also learns of issues related to PTSD that have importance for immigrant, refugee, and visible minority clients and relevance for service providers. These issues include the range of victimization, physical and sexual abuse, and physical health problems due to stress. Together, the information presented in this section facilitates the reader's understanding of PTSD as a contextualized and gendered experience.

"Data Findings" draws the reader into the depths of PTSD as a lived experience recounted by the participants themselves. The reader's awareness and knowledge of PTSD is shaped and supplemented in the course of reading excerpts of the participant descriptions, and illustrations of their diverse experiences. Consequently, the reader arrives at a more holistic and humanistic understanding of how PTSD colours the spectrum of immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women's lives and their experiences of illness and wellness. The reader learns of the negative health consequences of PTSD for immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women including impaired functioning as breadwinners/mothers and reduced help-seeking behaviours. Participants' descriptions of their experiences with service providers (e.g., helpful, harmful) and their perceptions of service providers (e.g., physicians, psychiatrists) encourage the reader to consider factors directly influencing recovery (such as access to mental health services).

"Analysis of Data" builds on the reader's understanding of PTSD as it pertains to personal and professional areas indirectly influencing immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women's experiences of PTSD symptomatology and recovery. Personal factors such as language barriers, limited awareness and knowledge of PTSD symptoms, along with settlement and migration experiences are described. The reader realizes how personal factors may frustrate immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women's efforts to access mental health services. As well, the reader develops insight as to how professional factors such as accurate identification of clients as immigrants, refugees, or visible minorities; and appropriate use of clinical interventions on the part of service providers may best address the mental health needs and ameliorate PTSD symptoms within this client population.

"Conclusions" enables the reader to achieve an insightful and meaningful understanding of PTSD by summarizing concisely the wealth of information presented in the previous sections. Having been provided with a concise overview of the research findings, the reader is encouraged to consider their implications for effectively treating PTSD symptoms in immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women clients and thus improving the quality of mental health services. The reader comes to see how service providers' capacity for translating their theoretical knowledge of PTSD may affect client-based practice in terms of best addressing client symptoms, concerns, and mental health needs. The reader is led to conclude that there currently exists a lack of communication between clients and service providers relevant to client presentation of PTSD symptomatology, immigration history, or status as a visible minority. It is apparent to the reader, at the conclusion of this section, that this research study has successfully achieved its stated aims, goals, and expected outcomes.

"Recommendations" impresses upon the reader the importance of the research findings for informing policy on health care, education and immigration at local, provincial, and national levels. Recommended policy changes are accompanied by the suggestion that their successful implementation would better serve to address the amelioration of PTSD symptoms as experienced by immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women. Proposed policy changes include some of the following: enhancing access and utilization of mental health services by immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women; increasing recognition and intervention of PTSD by service providers; promoting community outreach/education on PTSD symptoms; and allocating government funding to eliminate treatment barriers. The reader is informed of future research directions and community action initiatives. This final section has value as the recommendations made are organized logically, presented with clarity, and grounded in insights achieved as a result of conducting this participatory action research study.

In summary, this research report provides the reader with a contextual and experiential understanding of PTSD as told in the words of immigrant, refugee, and visible minority women sufferers. On balance, this document has merit for educating service providers, researchers, and policy makers working in health care, education, and immigration areas about the contextual and gendered nature of PTSD symptoms. The glossary of terms, references, and appendices appear useful for promoting client-based practice. This report may be considered a stepping stone on the pathway leading to the restructuring of mental health service delivery on local, provincial, and national levels to better the lives and future health and wellness of Canadian women immigrants, refugees, and visible minorities.

CALL FOR PAPERS

Special Issue: WOMEN'S HEALTH IN WAR-TORN COUNTRIES
WOMEN'S HEALTH AND URBAN LIFE:
AN INTERNATIONAL AND INTERDISCIPLINARY JOURNAL
Deadline: June 30, 2003

We are in the process of preparing a special issue on women's health in war-torn countries for the Women's Health and Urban Life journal. We are particularly interested in women's reproductive, sexual, physical and mental health issues related to wars or their aftermath. Both qualitative and quantitative manuscripts, and theoretical or empirical works are welcome.

Papers should not exceed 30 pages, and four copies of the paper should be submitted. All submissions will be peer reviewed by anonymous reviewers. For more details about the goals, substantive basis and submission guidelines of the new journal, please contact or visit: <http://citd.scar.utoronto.ca/sever/index.html>

The journal is sponsored by the Wellesley Central Health Corporation and located at the Department of Sociology, University of Toronto. In general, the journal addresses a plethora of topics relating to women's and girls' health from an international and interdisciplinary perspective and links health to globalization and urbanization issues.

General topics include but are not limited to: women's health in general; health related to reproduction; health related to sexuality; health related to paid or unpaid labour; health related to parenthood; health and the environment; health and social policy; and health related to urbanization and globalization issues. The orientation of the journal is critical, feminist and social scientific. All scholarly articles on women's health are welcome for the regular issues.

WOMEN, CRIME AND THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM
WOMEN'S STUDIES
QUARTERLY
Guest Editor: LaVerne
McQuiller Williams
Deadline: August 1, 2003.

Since 1972, Women's Studies Quarterly has been the leading journal on teaching in women's studies. Thematic issues feature material for specialists and generalists, including current scholarship in accessible language, teaching materials and resources, creative writing, and book reviews. The intersections of race and class with gender are of special concern, as are international perspectives.

Women's Studies Quarterly is now seeking submissions for a special Winter 2004 issue on Women, Crime, and the Criminal Justice System. Although women make up a small percentage of felony offenders in the U.S., for more than a decade women's crime has grown at a rate far exceeding that of men (Bloom and Chesney-Lind, 2003). Even more frequently, women are involved in crime as victims: about 40% of the victims of violent crime are women (Belknap, 2001). Beyond the numbers, however, concern about women and the criminal justice system reflects fundamental feminist issues. The criminal justice system is, for all involved, a stark arena in which questions of equity, status, and rights are played out.

This issue of WSQ will focus on women as offenders, victims, and criminal justice professionals. The ways in which women's experiences in the criminal justice system are complicated by gender and connected to issues of race, class, and sexual orientation are of special concern, as are international and cross-cultural perspectives.

Submissions are invited which draw upon different feminist approaches to the study of women and the criminal justice system--including liberalism, radicalism, Marxism, and postmodernism. Contributions reflecting on the historical relationship of gender and crime and that report on the experience of women in the criminal justice system through analyses of specific policies and practices affecting women's lives, are welcome. In addition, we are seeking pedagogical resources for teaching about women, crime, and criminal justice. We particularly welcome material that reflects on educational experiences within the prison system, from both students and instructors.

The issue will feature articles, essays, creative writing, teaching materials, and book reviews that address one or more of the following questions:

- 1) How are women's or girls' crimes today different from men's or boys'? What are the ways in which gender shapes the crimes women or girls commit and how they perpetrate them?
- 2) What are the social conditions shaping criminal action among women or girls, for instance, poverty, barriers to services, or unemployment.
- 3) How can feminist scholarship contribute to our understanding of women or girls as offenders? As victims? As criminal justice professionals?

4) How do the dynamics of race, class, gender, ethnicity, and sexual orientation contribute to our understanding of women and/or girls as offenders? As victims? As criminal justice professionals? Do these dynamics look different at various levels of the criminal justice system, or in other countries?

5) How are women or girls treated as they move through the criminal justice process? For example, do beliefs about how women or girls should or should not behave effect the way the criminal justice system responds to crime or delinquency?

6) What are the issues facing women who are incarcerated in U.S. local, state, and federal institutions? Such issues may include sexual abuse by guards, HIV/AIDS, providing care for dependent children, and accessing medical care and educational programs. What issues are women facing in prisons outside the U.S.?

7) What impact do current criminal justice policies have on women? Such policies may include the impact of mandatory sentencing laws, the war on drugs, and policies that criminalize maternal drug use.

8) What are the issues facing women professionals in the criminal justice field, for instance, police officers, prosecutors, defense attorneys, judges, and corrections officers?

9) What are the issues facing female criminologists today? What obstacles shape their intellectual and career progress, and how does gender influence them as teachers and researchers? What might feminist criminological theory and practice look like in coming decades?

10) How does current female criminality relate to historical stereotypes and/or historical patterns, and how does the present criminal justice system differ from that of the past in its approach to women and gender-related issues?

11) How can teachers incorporate women and crime into the curriculum to foster learning and debate about gender and power relations at the local, national, and international levels?

Submissions to this special issue will be reviewed with the understanding that the materials have not been submitted to another journal. All submissions should be double-spaced, printed on one side of paper with 1-inch margins, and conform to the APA (in-text) citation style. Articles should not exceed 20 pages (7,000 words) in length, excluding references. Essays, short stories, and strategies for teaching (with syllabi) should not exceed 15 pages (5,250 words). Please send a disk and three hard copies of submissions along with a full mailing address, daytime telephone number, and an e-mail address to: Professor LaVerne McQuiller Williams, Rochester Institute of Technology, Department of Criminal Justice, 93 Lomb Memorial Drive, Rochester, NY, 14623, USA.

Any queries should be sent to LaVerne McQuiller Williams at llmgcj@rit.edu. The deadline for submission is August 1, 2003.

THIRDSPACE
Feminist Journal for Emerging Scholars

thirdspace is committed to the promotion of new feminist work in all areas of study. Our mandate is to produce a top-quality, refereed journal that demonstrates the broad range of applications for feminist theory and methodology, as well as gives emerging feminist scholars a venue for their work.

We also seek to make thirdspace a portal for connection with the wider feminist academic community.

This journal is a collaborative effort that brings together a wide range of students and scholars from a variety of disciplines to foster a strong, innovative presence for feminist studies in the emerging-scholar community and beyond.

thirdspace is published electronically twice a year, in March and November, and submissions are welcomed at any time. Submissions should be original work done while an 'emerging scholar': graduate student, postdoctoral fellow, new independent scholar, junior professional, or a similar status.

We welcome submissions in English, French, German, Spanish, and Arabic; we will also consider submissions in other languages.

All articles are peer-reviewed by established, senior feminist scholars. We are looking for articles, non-fiction essays, review articles, and research notes. We require one electronic copy and one paper copy of your submission. Submissions should be in MLA format, and must include an abstract and a brief biographical note which will be posted in the members' section of the magazine's web-site.

Call for Research Proposals south of the border:
Sexual Orientation Harassment in the U.S. Military

The Center for the Study of Sexual Minorities in the Military at the University of California, Santa Barbara is commissioning a study comparing rates of sexual orientation harassment in the armed forces and civilian society. Because the military is unlikely to allow original survey research, the study should adopt a "next-best" approach by summarizing research on the incidence of sexual orientation harassment in the armed forces and civilian society, and then discussing factors such as the demographics and regional background of service members that may influence whether the rates can be compared. To the extent possible, the study should try to determine whether the rate of abuse in the armed forces is higher or lower than the civilian rate. If the rate is different, the study should address mechanisms that may account for the difference.

The Center will pay $9,000 for the completion of such a study, but the author should also feel free to submit the manuscript for publication to a journal under her or his name. Interested scholars should contact Professor Aaron Belkin, Director, Center for the Study of Sexual Minorities in the Military, (805) 893-5664; belkin@polsci.ucsb.edu.

CALL FOR APPLICATIONS

Ad Hoc Committee on Psychology and AIDS
Call for Nominations
Deadline: September 1, 2003

The American Psychological Association (APA) Ad Hoc Committee on Psychology and AIDS (COPA) is seeking nominations for a new member whose term will begin on January 1, 2004 and end on December 31, 2006. The mission of COPA, an ad hoc committee that reports directly to the APA Board of Directors, is to guide the development and implementation of APA's organizational responses to the HIV/AIDS epidemic.

COPA members are required to attend at least one, face-to-face meeting per year in Washington, DC, with expenses reimbursed by APA, and to participate in monthly conference calls. Between meetings, members are expected to devote a substantial portion of time to COPA projects, provide consultation to APA Office on AIDS staff, and participate in advocacy activities as needed.

Candidates should have demonstrated expertise in dealing with HIV/AIDS issues as a researcher, practitioner, educator, and/or policy advocate. COPA seeks to involve a diverse group of psychologists, including persons of color and individuals who are living with HIV. COPA is particularly interested in candidates who are employed in traditional university settings as well as candidates with expertise in the following areas:
(1) HIV/AIDS public policy; (2)

international HIV/AIDS issues; and (3) technology transfer and/or replication of effective HIV-related interventions.

Nomination materials should include the nominee's qualifications, a letter from the nominee indicating willingness to serve on COPA, and a curriculum vitae. Self-nominations are encouraged.

Materials should be sent to Robert Beverly, Office on AIDS, 750 First Street, NE, Washington, DC 20002-4242. All material must be received by September 1, 2003.

2003 SWAP
Feminist Mentoring Award

Congratulations to Dr. Niva Piran from OISE - chosen to receive the 2003 SWAP Feminist Mentoring Award! There were a number of other deserving nominees which says that feminist mentorship is alive and well in Canadian psychology programs and that we can look forward to receiving even more nominations or re-nominations in future years.

And from the recipient herself:

"What a pleasant surprise! Thank you and please thank the committee members and all involved for the time you took to consider me for the award. I am honored to receive the award. Mentorship has always meant a great deal to me and I am delighted to have something that is dear to me validated by the Women in Psychology section of CPA. In many institutions, I am afraid, this is part of the 'invisible labor of women.'
