

The Department of Psychology and Neuroscience at Dalhousie University invites applications for a probationary position as Instructor in our CPA accredited Clinical Psychology Program within the Department of Psychology and Neuroscience at Dalhousie University. The position is available beginning July 1, 2020. Candidates should have a PhD in Psychology, a CPA or an APA accredited internship, should be fully registered (for independent practice) in the province of Nova Scotia or be eligible for registration. The successful candidate will have demonstrated ability to contribute to the training of graduate students, undergraduate and graduate teaching (including among our existing course offerings), and departmental and university service. Information about the research activities and courses offered in our department can be found at www.psychology.dal.ca.

The Instructor in this position will teach eight classes at the graduate and undergraduate levels, with the possibility of a one course reduction depending on administrative responsibilities and supervisory load associated with undergraduate and graduate student research projects. They will also be responsible for supervising practica.

Although research is not a required component of this position, in keeping with the nature of the Psychology and Neuroscience Department, we will support the successful applicant in developing or continuing to develop their research program.

Dalhousie University (www.dal.ca) is located in the vibrant ocean-side city of Halifax, Nova Scotia, which offers an excellent quality of life, including active local food, arts, and music scenes, easy access to outdoor activities, and high-quality health and education centres.

Dalhousie University's Clinical Psychology program is based on a scientist-practitioner model and is designed to give our graduates a thorough grounding in science, research and clinical practice. Students are focused on research from the beginning of the program. Students also start applied training in their first year and continue throughout the program. Due to our emphasis on the science of psychology, our program produces clinical psychologists who blend the ideals of research and service.

All qualified candidates are encouraged to apply; however, Canadians and permanent residents will be given priority. Dalhousie University is committed to fostering a collegial culture grounded in diversity and inclusiveness. The University encourages applications from Indigenous persons, persons with a disability, racially visible persons, women, persons of minority sexual orientations and gender identities, and all candidates who would contribute to the diversity of our community. For more information, please visit www.dal.ca/hiringfordiversity.

Review of applications will begin November 1, 2019 and continue until the position is filled. Applications should be submitted at <http://dal.peopleadmin.ca/postings/2127>. Applications should include a summary of teaching experience, a summary of clinical experience, a summary of clinical supervision experience, a statement of teaching interest, a curriculum vitae, and evaluations received in previously taught university courses. Please also arrange for three referees to send confidential letters of reference under separate cover to beatrice.hanisch@dal.ca.

Experience with and training in clinical psychology from a lifespan perspective is an asset (but not a requirement).
