Your Opportunity:

We are seeking a clinical neuropsychologist with a particularly strong clinical psychology background to join our adult neuropsychology practice at Alberta Hospital Edmonton, a large psychiatric facility associated with the University of Alberta.

The successful candidate will provide neuropsychological services to adult psychiatry inpatients across the service continuum of forensic, acute, and tertiary service programs. Duties will include the completion of comprehensive neuropsychological assessments with psychometric support, clinical supervision of staff and students, and inter-professional collaboration.

Description:

As a Psychologist II, you will provide advanced clinical services (including psychological assessment, diagnosis and/or intervention), consultation and education to the interprofessional team and patients/families, and/or provides clinical leadership and coordination in an assigned program area. This is an advanced level psychology position that will allow you to work with or within teams to provide and inform services for patients with complex and multi-dimensional medical, psychological, interpersonal, environmental and/or instrumental needs.

You will consult, collaborate, and enact initiatives to ensure that practices are evidence based and in alignment with psychology standards of practice and code of ethics, as well as policy, legislation and regulations. You will be expected to lead, facilitate and/or participate in program, policy, and procedure development, service planning, staff development, quality improvement and evaluation, and/or research activities as identified by the needs of the service area(s). You may provide supervision to doctoral level psychology residents, master's level interns, provisional psychologists, psychometrists and other team members.
